

Another story about Baltinu Stone

Once upon a time the Devil had intended to build himself a splendid palace on the Lake Baltini, which was called 'Vikis' during that time. He had got a large stone for the foundation. He had carried it already till the planned site, but unfortunately the cock of "Baltini" home had crowed. By hearing the cock, the Devil had to leave the stone behind and to run away. The stone had hit the ground very hard, it had split into two parts; the Devil had seen that and had concluded - since the foundation stone split in the middle, there is no use building a castle, which obviously will not be powerful, and it not worth the effort. And this is how the Devil had changed his mind, but the stone left behind by the Devil is still seen near "Baltini" home and greets every passer-by.
