

Split stone in Zasa vicinity

Once upon a time by wandering around the Devil had decided to trick the estate manager of Zasa manor. He had taken a large stone from the River Daugava and had carried through the Menku mill by crossing the Linaite bog. The stone had been so large and heavy that his feet had stuck deep in the ground. Therefore he threw the stone in the bog and he had split it in two parts. One half of the stone he now carried to Zasa manor. He wanted to trick the estate manager by throwing the stone in the River Dzirnupite and blocking the river. But the Devil did not manage to throw the heavy stone that far. The Devil had feared to go closer to the river, and this is why the nearly two metres wide and three metres long stone has not been moved away and is still standing at the river, near Zasa manor.
